Phedre,

by Jean Racine

Tue 6th-Sat 10th

Old Fire Station Theatre,

One of this year's finest student casts assembles next week for Racine's masterpiece

Phedre, in a new translation by Ted Hughes.

Hippolytus, the original Greek tragedy by Euripides, is in Racine's version centred around Phedre.

Theseus' queen and Hippolytus' stepmother. In Theseus' absence Phedre is cursed by the goddess

Venus to fall in love with her stepson; so in love does she fall, in fact, that she becomes extremely ill. When Theseus is pronounced dead by rumour, her servant Oenone encourages her to confess her infatuation to a shocked Hippolytus, who naturally rejects her. When it is then discovered that Theseus, far from being dead, has returned triumphant to the palace, Oenone's next bright idea is for Phedre to accuse Hippolytus of rape. According to the plan, this will simply result in the banishment of Hippolytus and the preservation of Phedre's honour; but this being a Greek tragedy, events do not turn out as hoped, and the play rockets to a devastating production from director Rob Crumpton, enhanced by original costumes by Amy Levene and a new score from Tom Foster-Carter. Nicole Scott, assuming the weighty role of Phedre, displays maturity beyond her years in an intense and detailed portrayal, coupled with a defined physicality which reflects the fluctuating emotions of a woman gnawed with grief. Lauren Bloom, as Oenone, provides solid support, and Alastair Sooke and Jill Crawford, as Hippolytus and his beloved Aricia, look certain to deliver fine performances in their exploration of spent some considerable time exploring the complex relations of the characters in order to do full justice

It is evident that the director and cast have

This looks set to be a stylish and innovative conclusion.

REVIEW: RESTAURANT

12/13 Park End Street Tel: 01865-247777/248888/203040

When the TajMahalon Turl Street closed its doors for the last time, many feared that Oxford's oldest Indian had slipped out the lives of students and other city dwellers for ever. This, I found out the other day, was not the case. Pushed out by high rates, Taj Mahalhas moved to Park End Street, rebranded itself (adding a touch of geographically incorrect chic), and is now styled La Taj Mahal. No marauding, lager-downing rug by playershere; or, for that matter, flock wallpaper or other clichésofdecor. The interior is cool, dark, and strikingly modern and European.

Led to our table by an extremely courteous gentleman, my companion and I proceeded to devourvastnumbers of poppodoms. One of the dazzling array of relishes-apiquant, creamy concotion with generous amounts of corianderwas quite the nicest I have tasted, and the whole poppodom experience was extremely good. As my companion remarked, we might as well have walked out then and written the review - indifferent Indians never serve good poppodoms. Still, in the tradition of thorough investigative journalism, we carried on, taking time to peruse the wine list.

This was a cheery relaxed affair with three house whites and reds, starting at a very reasonable £7.95. I chose a New Zealand One student production not to be missed. Jessie Ahearn, 31 / 1 / 01
